THE MIDDLEBURY BREAD LOAF SCHOOL OF ENGLISH is a six-week intensive summer graduate program, with locations in Vermont, New Mexico, and Oxford, England. Bread Loaf offers a rigorous and innovative master's degree program, with courses designed specifically for the curious and engaged K-12 English and language arts teacher.

You'll meet and work with some of the finest faculty in the fields of literature, creative writing, literacy and pedagogy, and theater arts. You'll also have access to the nationally recognized Bread Loaf Teacher Network for a lifetime of professional connections and resources.

WHOLE NEW WAY

WHY BREAD LOAF?

Bread Loaf's diverse and progressive curriculum is designed for K-12 English and language arts teachers who are looking for an intensive summer graduate-level learning environment. In six weeks of rigorous on-campus study, you can work toward a master's degree or earn a certificate in Continuing Graduate Education, taking courses such as Shakespeare across Media; Creative Nonfiction; Race and American Literature; and Writing, Rhetoric, Teaching.

THE BEST OF THE BEST

Bread Loaf's distinguished and dedicated faculty come from some of the finest institutions throughout the U.S. and U.K., and they are active and accessible members of the summer campus community. Classes are small, meals are shared, and conversations can happen anywhere, anytime—on the front porch, over coffee, during a morning hike. Throughout the summer, you'll also have the chance to interact with an inspiring group of visiting writers and speakers who participate in classes and workshops.

"I return to Bread Loaf year after year to challenge my own thinking."

COMMUNITY THAT LASTS

Founded in 1920, Bread Loaf has long been a highly respected institution of graduate-level study. Students come from all walks of life, and from all around the world. Whether you want to earn a master's degree or gain professional development, Bread Loaf is a cohesive community that will energize you with a lifetime of relevant resources. And the nationally recognized Bread Loaf Teacher Network provides year-round connections with other teachers to promote collaborations, support, and the development of innovative teaching practices.
